XML files that record data or events. Tag Microsoft Word can use the XML tag to add and organize information. The tag is composed of three parts: the 'name' or 'tag name', the 'data type', and the 'value'. The default value of the name and data type are listed in parentheses after the tag name. Tag Example To add a tag, enter the name followed by a closing bracket: In this example, the XML file contains three tags. The first (Format > Tag > Enter) tag is the one entered above. The second (Format > Tag) is the tag which is the parent of the first tag. It contains the same name and data type as the first tag but adds a child tag with the same name but a different value. The third tag (Format > Tag) is the same as the second tag, but it adds a different child tag. Notice that the two child tags of the Format tag have the same data type. In Word, if you want to display a tag in a document or in a document's Outline, you must follow the tag with a '' character, which displays the tag in bold. Tag Name Tag data types Comments Bold Name The name of the tag. Data type The data type that specifies the type of data to store in the tag. The data type is one of the following values: numeric non-numeric Date and time Date datetime Time duration email address general information Integer Double Character string Blank Blank (no data type) Blank (no data type) Tab General Table Chart Alignment Alignment (columns or rows) Section Page Layout Layout (horizontal or vertical) Leader Leader (before a paragraph) Ruler Ruler (at the beginning of a paragraph) Window Window (character) Toggle switch Status bar Custom Table Custom Table (contents) Data Frames Matrix Sheet Table List Image Picture Custom View Custom View (contents)
