and Obesity – What do we know? Research carried out in 2012 by the World Health Organisation (WHO) indicates that the link between climate change and obesity is a complicated one, the mechanisms underlying this relationship can't be simply drawn from correlation between extreme weather and obesity. Whilst there is a strong link between climate change and obesity, the data is limited and much of the research is based on self-reporting from the participants. There is an increasing amount of research being carried out, that proves there is a correlation between obesity and extreme weather, with three of the most common factors in this study being low-cost, time-consuming, unhealthy, high-calorie foods and easy access to them. The study carried out by the WHO was conducted in five continents, investigating the link between extreme weather and obesity. It involved 25 countries and over 400,000 people. Results of the study led to three main conclusions: This study is a step in the right direction for those who are trying to find answers. The next step is to carry out extensive and rigorous research on this topic. There is a need for this due to the fact that the link between extreme weather and obesity is very strong. There are ways to deal with the increasing rates of obesity and climate change, with possibilities such as expanding healthy and sustainable food options and increasing physical activity levels. Former Michigan State University police officer Andrew Mitchell is out of jail in part because he has a family and girlfriend. On Friday, the former cop was released from Macomb County Jail, according to WDIV. He had been held there since he was arrested on May 7, 2013, for allegedly crashing into the home of a pregnant woman. Mitchell, who pleaded guilty to misdemeanor reckless driving, was sentenced to six months on Feb. 27.
