Intravenous cholangiography after endoscopic retrograde cholangiopancreatography: an effectiveness study. A prospective, randomized, controlled study was designed to compare the effectiveness of intravenous cholangiography after endoscopic retrograde cholangiopancreatography (ERCP) when performed before versus after ERCP. This was a randomized, prospective, controlled study. The setting was a large tertiary-care center. The study group consisted of 790 consecutive patients who had ERCP and intraoperative cholangiography. Patients were randomized into two groups, as follows: group A (413 patients) had intravenous cholangiography performed before ERCP, and group B (377 patients) had it performed after ERCP.
