If you regularly use public transport you are probably familiar with becoming a “buddy” with the person sitting beside you. They become your “soulmate”, your “friend”, your “mate” even! You can even make it a “buddy love”. I am lucky enough to have a buddy love. Brian from the 23 shared a seat (aka couple). We had lived within 7km of each other for 2 years prior to our trip and had never met. It was a bit before our trip that he let me know he was over his initial shyness. I was surprised it took him that long. I think he was shy initially because he had never done anything like this before and was wary of it. I found the friendship though was easy. We became instant friends. It was quite easy to develop it into a friendship and the more we got to know each other the more mutual friends we developed. I know that we have had our share of fun together.

I've learnt some important lessons, been out of my comfort zone and he has done the same. We are fine with that.

I hope this post can be an inspiration for you all to have a friend that's your buddy. I've found it very useful to have a buddy you can consult on anything. The conversation is open and honest. I know there are no secret talks when they are in your company. There are no barriers with issues to resolve. I am privileged to know this person through soul and social gatherings and still I get this benefit. I've learnt to be clear with him and I think he has done a similar to me. We have many things in common, even our work and where we live. It's not easy to communicate to another when they are on two different continents and time zones. We have developed a mutual respect with trust. We have a close relationship. It's a friendship that has endured and I am so grateful. We are still very much friends. It has grown the more we've been in this together. I'm a bit of an expert at this now and I'm confident I can share with you how I did it. I recommend this to be a friendship for life. At some point in the future, they will become mates for life. So what is the key to a friendship that could last
