To determine the outcome of ovarian stimulation and assisted reproductive techniques (ART) in women older than 42 years and to assess the role of age as a determinant of outcome. Retrospective analysis of an ART database. Academic medical center. One hundred ninety-six women in whom clomiphene citrate and human menopausal gonadotropin (hMG) were used for ovarian stimulation. Number and type of treatment cycles; mean age, number of oocytes retrieved, fertilization rate, transfer rate, and number of embryos transferred; and clinical pregnancy and miscarriage rates. Age greater than 42 years was not associated with an increased failure rate. A trend toward decreased pregnancy rates in women older than 42 years was observed, however, without statistical significance. Age alone may not be a predictor of in vitro fertilization and intracytoplasmic sperm injection success.Q: How to select maximum value in a list? I have
