It is not possible to use both and - one must be one or the other. You can either: Put your "text" into a span, like TEXT or TEXT or TEXT But the closing tag for each line of text must be the same, so you can either: Use or as you already do, with TEXT or TEXT This is not invalid markup - you simply do not need to have the div wrapping the text (or any other tags). I have noticed that your links use only - this is not valid HTML and you must use (or if you are starting a new document). Your images are wrapped in tags, which is invalid markup. This means that each image must be wrapped in its own tag and the src attribute of each image link must be the full path to the image (e.g.

The present invention relates to a method and an apparatus for assembling a part, which method and apparatus can be used for assembling a workpiece from a plurality of individual parts.

A known method and an apparatus for assembling a workpiece from a plurality of individual parts is disclosed in Japanese Utility Model Laid-Open No. 61-210935. This known method and apparatus includes a part feeder provided on the side of a frame where a workpiece is to be assembled from the individual parts. The part feeder can store individual parts and send out the individual parts one after another. The part feeder receives individual parts from the side of the frame, feeds out the individual parts, and transfers the individual parts one after another to a part pallet on the side of the frame where the workpiece is to be assembled from the individual parts. In this method and apparatus, there are no large moving parts, so that the working environment is not deteriorated. There are, however, various problems in assembling the workpiece from the individual parts, which are not solved in the above-described method and apparatus. The problems are as follows: 1. It takes a long time to transfer the individual parts one after another to the workpiece. 2. The individual parts are stored in the part feeder one after another from the bottom portion of the part feeder and are fed out one after another from the part feeder. In this case, the individual parts have a tendency to be in a disorderly order. Therefore, it takes a long time to transfer the individual
