Twenty immature teeth were randomly divided into experimental group and control group, 10 teeth in each group. Experimental group was reconstructed with permanent tooth buds. Control group was only filled with sterile saline. Then, they were incubated in 37 degrees C for 5 days. The teeth were evaluated with gross observation, X-ray film, HE staining and SEM. The tooth gingival was normal in the experimental group. The periodontal membrane, marginal bone and cementum in the experimental group were in good condition. The periodontal membrane, marginal bone and cementum were with good condition in the control group. The permanent tooth buds can be used as periodontal tissues to reconstruct immature teeth. The present invention relates to a turbocharger unit for an engine of a vehicle such as a motorcycle. More particularly, the present invention relates to a turbocharger unit having a mount for mounting a bearing housing therein. U.S. Pat. No. 5,094,102 entitled xe2x80x9cOil Pump Having a Bearing Carrier and a Bearing Assemblyxe2x80x9d granted to James H. Fankhauser on Mar. 10, 1992 discloses a turbocharger unit having a bearing carrier in which a bearing housing is received. The bearing carrier has a pair of apertures through which a pair of bearing assemblies extend. The bearing housing extends through the apertures such that a pair of bearing journals are supported by the bearing housing. An oil pump is secured to the bearing carrier. In the illustrated turbocharger unit, the oil pump is secured to the bearing carrier by means of two bolts which 2d92ce491b
