Friday that Mueller’s team will interview the president on June 17 at the White House. But will it be good for Trump? The answer, according to Bob Mueller’s report, is “No,” says Jay Sekulow. Mueller is at work on the details of his report, which could be delivered to the attorney general as soon as next week. The details, according to officials, have already been submitted to the Justice Department for review. In the report, the special counsel would only say that there was “information and evidence” to support the idea that Trump tried to obstruct the Russia investigation. Mueller took it a step further by saying there was evidence that Trump could not be indicted for the crime of obstruction but that the Justice Department had the authority to decide whether the president should be charged. “The Constitution requires a process other than the criminal justice system to formally accuse a president of wrongdoing,” the report reads. “The department agreed with our recommendation and informed the president of that decision in a letter dated March 28, 2019.” The report, expected to be roughly 500 pages, will not be made public. TRUMP MOCKS MUELLER AS 'A VERY POLITICALLY CORRECT, OBNOXIOUS BASTARD' Mueller told the president by letter last month that he was not under criminal investigation but that it appeared Trump’s actions did “not constitute a crime.” Trump, who called the report “a complete and total exoneration,” tweeted that he should be interviewed again by the special counsel. “Why didn’t Robert Mueller interview me?” Trump tweeted.
A spokesman for Mueller declined to comment. While Mueller also didn’t say he would indict Trump, he did say he would not exonerate him of criminal wrongdoing. “If we had confidence after a thorough investigation of the facts that the president clearly did not commit obstruction of justice,
