on serum human thyroid-stimulating hormone and antithyroid antibodies in patients with well-controlled bipolar I or schizoaffective disorders. To investigate the effects of sustained-release carbamazepine (SRCMZ) on serum human thyroid-stimulating hormone (hTSH) and antithyroid antibodies in patients with bipolar I or schizoaffective disorders. Eleven euthyroid patients (10 bipolar I and 1 schizoaffective) with a mean age of 46.5 +/- 11.9 years, a body mass index of 25.1 +/- 3.7, and a median duration of illness of 5.2 years were studied before and 5 months after treatment with SRCMZ. Samples for serum levels of hTSH and antithyroid antibodies (microsomal and thyroglobulin antibodies) were taken before and 5 months after the treatment. The Spearman correlation and Friedman's test were used to analyze the relationship between the pretreatment levels of hTSH, antithyroid antibodies, and time. Compared with the pretreatment levels of hTSH and antithyroid antibodies, the post-treatment serum levels of hTSH were significantly reduced (P 0.05). The pretreatment levels of hTSH and antithyroid antibodies were positively correlated (
