JohnStetson23 Sep 2012 1:10 pm ET | Last Updated August 15, 2009'John Stetson' review of Earth Crisis'Trial of Souls' New Album'Earth Crisis' 'Trial of Souls' is the latest band to emerge from the underground, and it's a welcome respite from the other New and Oldschool bands that have been making the rounds. It was released by Wormhole Records of the UK and Canada, and is the second of four albums to be released by the label. With such a prolific catalog, Earth Crisis seems to have some kind of "schedule" and are not afraid to mix it up with bands from different eras and styles. The album is a perfect example of how to mix up different genres of music, making a nice blend of New Wave, Progressive Rock, Reggae and more. Here are the highlights:1. "Freedom" starts the album off with an old-school New Wave intro with a touch of Reggae. Tossing in a few slow, searing guitars and vocalists Chris Daniels and Mike Tramp's melodic vocals, the song will have your head bobbing to the beat.2. "In a Land of No Gods" is a great progressive rock song with clean vocals, and a groovy guitar solo at the end. One of the best parts of the song is when Daniels screams his final, "The war has ended," as a great contrast to the somber beginning of the song. A nice, mellow but intense song for the most part, you'll find yourself bobbing along to the beat.3. "In the Name of the Empire" is one of the songs that takes some getting used to, as you may have a hard time being able to believe that the song is from Earth Crisis. Taking on a more Reggae-like sound, it's one of the more difficult songs on the album, but it is well-written. On the song, you'll hear the soulful vocals of Mike Tramp, the kind of gritty vocals that are hard to come by on the album. This song is up there with "All Steel" and "Island" as one of the best on the album.4. "A Thousand Years" is a fast, aggressive song, and is a different style to all the songs on the album. Taking on a more Black Metal-like feel, it's a good way to break the monotony of the album, and give a good contrast to
