Little is known about health service delivery to children who fall below Medicaid's thresholds for coverage. We attempted to identify children who may qualify for Medicaid-based health services by using three data sources and a literature review. We identified children (Un couple months ago, I was browsing the internet and came across a post by Ms. Bozena Radder about the results of the student vote in the US presidential elections, which was somewhat ironic to me. The post I read was titled "US presidential election voting process". I think that title was a bit misleading, but that was the first time I really noticed the voting process used in the US is not at all the same as the other countries I knew of. I realized that if the voting process in the US is not the same as other countries, then the people who are running a country should take the time to understand why each country has its own system for voting. Basically, the way the US voting system works is not so much different from other countries. Every US citizen is eligible to vote, but there is only a small percentage who actually votes. The post I read was actually outlining why the voting process in the US is not so democratic, the way it is explained in the article was too complicated for me to understand and was something about the lack of participation by the poor and the urban areas. I just did not get the point of why the poor and the urban areas do not vote.
