

KeyMacro is a kind of macro-editor for Windows that enables you to create macros for Windows applications. A macro is nothing but a sequence of keystrokes that perform a specific action. With KeyMacro you can add a new action to the current set of macros or modify an existing action. The user interface of KeyMacro is easy to use and intuitive. There are 2 ways to edit macros with KeyMacro. You can either use a new menu item "Create" in the menu that has been available for quite some time, or a new user interface window. The menu item is pretty self-explanatory, it creates a new macro (which is used to execute the command or run an application). The window however has several features you can set. When you want to create a macro, select the menu item "Create" and select a name for the macro. You can also select whether or not you want to run this macro automatically after you start the program. Another useful option is to define what happens in a case the program fails. If you don't specify that action, then the program will continue executing the rest of the macros. Another nice feature is that you can also add the path to an application you want to execute from the program menu. With that you can easily execute any program from any location, since the path to the program is written in the program menu. It is also possible to add a new action to the current macro, if you don't want to create a new macro. This can be helpful if you have already created a macro with a certain sequence of keystrokes and you don't want to have to go and delete it every time you create a new action. The name and key combination can be entered with an input box that has a predefined format. If you want to add a new key, you can just select it from the predefined format (or enter a new one). You can also use a list of your favorite key combinations. This enables you to easily navigate through the list and add a new key to a specific macro. The Macro Window is a window that looks just like a window of a text editor. The input and output windows are simply placed next to each other. So, if you want to enter a key combination, you just need to press the "Enter" key, and the selected key will appear in the input window. You can now add the key combination to the selected macro 70238732e0
