Chemotherapy-induced nausea and vomiting (CINV) are among the most common and distressing symptoms experienced by patients receiving chemotherapy. The goal of managing CINV is to maximize the patient's quality of life while minimizing the associated morbidity and mortality. The pathophysiology of CINV includes the activation of serotonin, opioid and substance P receptors, corticotropin-releasing hormone receptors, and kappa-opioid receptors in the chemoreceptor trigger zone of the area postrema. However, not all patients experience CINV to the same degree. This may be due to individual differences in sensitivity to the physiologic mediators of CINV. The use of appropriate antiemetic medications in patients who are at a high risk for CINV has been shown to significantly decrease the incidence and severity of CINV. The classes of drugs that are generally most effective in the treatment of CINV are 5-HT3 antagonists, benzodiazepines, and corticosteroids.2012 NFL Draft: Breaking Down Who the Patriots Might Pick in the Second Round The Patriots are scheduled to pick No. 54th in the 2012 NFL Draft, following the Kansas City Chiefs at No. 50 and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers at No. 55. "Our scouts have had a chance to spend time with players throughout the entire process, they've done a tremendous job in making sure they really know each player," GM Danny Ainge said. "We have a top priority of selecting the best available player regardless of position. "It's very important that a player be able to do what they were drafted to do, and it's not always about the highest-graded player. We know it's not only about one player. It's about maximizing the good players on the board." The Patriots have been especially impressed by the defensive players available
