
The KEYMACRO is a security feature. If a user has authority to read or write to the computer they can use the KEYMACRO to lock the keyboard so that it cannot be changed. This will prevent someone from changing the operating system (even if they have administrator access to the computer) and will secure the machine from being accessed in that manner. A value of zero means the KEYMACRO should be disabled and can only be used to verify that the keyboard has not been locked. KEYMACRO will prevent someone from changing the operating system (even if they have administrator access to the computer) and will secure the machine from being accessed in that manner. KEYMACRO will prevent someone from changing the operating system (even if they have administrator access to the computer) and will secure the machine from being accessed in that manner. KEYMACRO is not available on the PARA port of the multi-port adapter. Example: keymacro --key0 0x00 --key1 0x20 --key2 0x40 --key3 0x60 --key4 0x80 --key5 0xc0 --key6 0xe0 --key7 0xf0 Example: keymacro --key0 0x00 --key1 0x20 --key2 0x40 --key3 0x60 --key4 0x80 --key5 0xc0 --key6 0xe0 --key7 0xf0 LPT1 Inputs: Pin Name: D0 Pin Code: 10(LPT1_D0) Pin Port: LPT1 D0 is the first input on the parallel port. LPT2 Inputs: Pin Name: D1 Pin Code: 11(LPT2_D1) Pin Port: LPT2 D1 is the second input on the parallel port. LPT2 inputs are not available on the multi-port adapter. This was the first project I ever worked on in Kosovo and it was a very interesting challenge. The owner, Charles, was very passionate about his work. He spent many hours in the field working to understand the challenges and difficulties that he'd face. He helped me to understand this field better. After some great feedback and discussion, he agreed to share his best practice. There were so many risks during this project.
