If you're a beginner, you'll want to start with the newest version of Photoshop, Photoshop CS4. ## Making Contact Lenses More Resilient Contact lenses give you the ability to correct your vision and increase your field of view. They also look great and often make people feel comfortable. If you're like most people, one of the reasons you got into contact lenses is because you loved to wear them. Because contact lenses change your vision, you must consider how you're going to care for them. You can purchase contact lenses online or in retail stores. Either way, you must be careful that you don't use lenses that have degraded or expired. Before you start wearing contact lenses, you need to choose your contacts, or lens. Contact lenses come in many different shapes and designs, but the basic choice is whether you have cataracts or presbyopia. Cataracts are the name given to a condition where the lens of your eye isn't clear and the cells start to die and accumulate to a thickening at the back of your eye. They cause blurred vision and vision problems. Presbyopia is a condition where the lens gets soft and gets hard to focus on objects because of old age.

Presbyopia creates the symptoms that many people associate with old age. You can choose from various brands of lenses, but the difference between brands is the lens material. Although the material of the lens is the same, the brand can have a better coating or a better edge design. This coating either gives you better protection against eye dryness or is designed to keep debris from accumulating in the lens. The edge design also may be designed to increase the comfort of the lens and reduce the risks of dislodging. After you select the brand of contact you'd like, you need to figure out how you're going to wear them. You can buy a _single-use lens,_ which has a prefitted case. That case helps you insert the lenses properly and securely in your eye, but it doesn't help you remove the lenses, clean them, or store them when you're not using them. After you purchase a lens, you must get it fitted, or measured, and then prescribed. The first contact fitting is like going to a dressmaker to find out what you're going to wear for a wedding. You're put in the same dress or a contact without a prescription. Your optometrist or ophthalmologist then goes through the different lenses

A blog for all seasons; A blog for one; A blog for all. All things balance in nature. The daily rhythm of life offers us numerous clues to health and healing if only we understand them. Here are a few that apply to what we call the season of Spring. Sunday, January 29, 2013 The Spring Equinox (Summer Solstice) is upon us. Today's sunrise was at 5:58am. The sky was clear and the wind gentle. The winter had ruled and we were left with a season of newness, renewal and new beginnings. What better day to sit in a chair and reflect on what is new and what is old in this time of change. I started my morning with an early winter walk as I enjoyed the silence of the early day. I meditated on how the balance of air, water, and fire in me had changed. Today is the Summer Solstice, an extra long day of the year. Daylight is the longest recorded. Today's sunrise was at 6:16am, the Sun had reached its northernmost point in the sky. I checked the weather and to my pleasant surprise, we were blessed with sun rays of warm light to enlighten our lives. I re-enacted my morning reflections in my meditation in the garden this evening and reflected on my equinox. I will celebrate this event next Sunday, August 23, 2013, but was glad to be able to celebrate this moment today. The equinox is considered the mid point of summer and winter. I enjoyed this moment of light, warmth, and the gentle breeze. Nothing is the same now. The skies are filled with rainbows and warm sunlight. Life is reborn and all things are new. We celebrate each day for its gift, everyday we are able to live and enjoy. Monday, January 9, 2013 Behold the glory of winter and the loss of life. How the days grow shorter and The winter darkens the spirit. A storm brews in the sky, with only one bright star to guide. The winter is the time of quiet, Our carefree hearts drain of joy. Do not let this time of sorrow Continue to touch your spirit, For this season is the time for knowing, The joy of life in the cycle of the year. Friday, January 6, 2013 I had a beautiful day in the garden and was inspired by
