Analysis of mononuclear cell subpopulations in newborns with aberrant cell differentiation syndromes. The immunological capacity of cord blood lymphocytes from 60 newborns with clinical manifestations of anomalous cell maturation and differentiation was studied. The aberrant cell differentiation syndrome (AD) was characterized by the immunodeficiency of Ia+ cells, the absence of DNA-reactive IgM+ B lymphocytes, and the unique pattern of polykaryon formation due to the absence of sIg+ T lymphocytes. It was found that this syndrome was associated with the depletion of precursors of antibody secreting plasma cells, B lymphocytes, and natural killer (NK) cells. In newborns with AD deficiency of macrophages was
