As I'm writing about my grandma this month, I'm reminded of my own small faith journey. When I was growing up in the 1980s, I went to church almost every Sunday. My grandma, who was my favorite person in the world, might have been my first and only true faith-based experience. She is the one who taught me to pray in our house every night, even though she wasn't a religious person. I may have had doubts about God when I was a kid, but I certainly wasn't questioning God. Everything felt so simple and right. I didn't know anything different. Everything was good. I grew up with my grandma, my dad, my brother, and our dog for most of my childhood. If we were sick, we got our medicine from the pharmacy at the grocery store. If we needed to clean, we used a bidet. If we went out to eat, we could just tell the waiter what we needed. I didn't know what kids who went to other schools with different laws and more rules and traditions did. I wasn't thinking about gender roles, sex, abortion, youth-aimed entertainment, consumerism, or much about the outside world. I knew my grandma loved me and would do anything for me. She was her whole world. And then came my teen years. My grandma was diagnosed with Alzheimer's in 1989. I remember her getting scared about the prospect of losing her mind, and slowly becoming a woman with no family. Her children's kids were no longer "family," they were just people. I remember being gone a lot and needing to do homework, so I didn't spend as much time with her. But she never forgot who I was. I had to let her know that I was growing up and needed my space. I was the one who had to cut the cord. She always looked at me when I left the room; she never forgot I was there. As my years away from home multiplied, it became harder 82138339de
