Statistical Distribution Library For PC

The VCL Samples Library is a set of general utility classes for the C++ Visual Component Library. Including the shared library is almost as easy as including a header file - just include "samples.h". All types and functions in the library are "static", and make use of VCL's robust type system. It provides a set of utility functions for generating (pseudo) random numbers and for performing statistical sampling. It also contains functions to process tabular data. All of the functions in the Samples Library are implemented using standard templates, and most are generic enough that they can be easily applied to any type. A simple example of using the functions in the Samples Library is shown here. The fGETRANDOM function retrieves a pseudo-random number from a specified device. The function returns a null-terminated string that contains the number. A null pointer can be passed to the function to get a null string. The maximum number of characters that can be stored is specified by the parameter MAX. A null string will be returned when the device is not initialized. The function returns an error code if the request is not supported. The ERROR_MSG specifies the error message to be displayed.
