CYP1A1 MspI polymorphism as a risk factor for lung cancer in south Indian population. Polymorphic MspI restriction site within the CYP1A1 gene resulting in amino acid sequence Val-->Ile at codon 462 has been reported to be associated with increased risk of lung cancer in the White population. The aim of this study was to evaluate the possible association of this polymorphism with lung cancer in the south Indian population. The study included 92 patients with cancer of the lung and 91 control subjects matched for age and sex. DNA was isolated and the polymerase chain reaction-restriction fragment length polymorphism method was used to detect the MspI restriction site within CYP1A1. The distribution of the MspI restriction site variants was comparable between control and lung cancer subjects. We conclude that this polymorphism is not a risk factor for lung cancer in the south Indian population. The Clinical and Neuropsychological Effects of Anticonvulsant Therapy in Youth With Severe Behavioral Problems and Anticonvulsant Medication. The purpose of this study is to report data on the clinical and neuropsychological effects of anticonvulsant medication in youth with severe behavioral problems referred to a regional child and adolescent psychiatric service in New Zealand. The study compares outcomes on clinical and neuropsychological measures in 8 youth (ages 14-17 years) with severe behavioral problems and pervasive developmental disorders, as well as poorer academic/school achievement, with outcomes in 15 youth (ages 7-17 years) with severe behavioral problems who had been identified as possibly having epilepsy, and who have received anticonvulsant medication. Youth with severe behavioral problems who were not receiving anticonvulsant medication performed worse on measures of memory, attention, impulsivity, conduct, and intelligence compared to the medicated group of youth with severe behavioral problems. This study supports the use of anticonvulsant medication to treat youth with severe behavioral problems who have poor academic achievement and/or cognitive impairment. However, further research in larger samples is required to elucidate the cognitive effects of anticonvulsant medication specifically in youth with pervasive developmental disorders. In this proposal.
