Keymacro is an application that permits any windows application to be extended by a keyboard. By doing so, it is possible to write any command on your keyboard as a macro and execute it on any windows application. This application was initially developed for the benefit of programmers who need to execute a very specific command at any time. In particular, the macro will be executed, even if you do not press a key during the application of the command. Keymacro offers three methods of recording of the command and a variable of the character you want to type. You can choose to register to it a hotkey on the keyboard, it can be a unique combination of keys or you can make the keyboard driver send a keystroke (any key) at a given time. And above all you can configure the macro to launch a window on the desktop by starting it directly with the application of a command. These settings and parameters are flexible, as you can also assign to the window which will be launched, you can choose between a close button or a button to run the macro. This application also permits you to assign a macro to a button on your mouse in the same way that you do with the keyboard. IMPORTANT NOTE: Keymacro is a freeware application that you must run in your personal computer. Once installed on your computer, your session will not work if you try to register a macro with the keyboard. KEYMACRO are some basic parameters that can be changed from the application interface: • The way that the macro is registered • The keyboard or mouse macro • The hotkey assigned to the macro • The number of copies of the macro assigned to the application • The window size of the application • The type of macro launched. For example, for the command launch window to be opened, it has to be set to Run after Click COPYRIGHT : Groupe Recheb is the owner of this software.
