Clipboard content can be used to paste it back as any other items. When a copy/paste action is done, the clipboard content becomes a temporary file. Users can then browse this file to backup, edit or otherwise manipulate content. You can also open an instance or instance stream from the clipboard, in many different ways. This software application features a typical looking dialog that allows users to define content to save in the clipboard. In addition to that, there is an option to exclude items from copy and paste. Otherwise, you can also change the content type and content size to a different value. Clipboarder has a fairly straightforward interface that is well organised and makes it easy to pick up. However, the user still faces a problem when it comes to customizing the application's look and feel. The file browser appears as soon as the software begins, without any transition. Users will then be presented with a window where they can import files by drag and drop. Clipboarder is a limited but useful utility.
