Digital Design With Rtl Design Vhdl And Verilog download.Sierra Nevada Corporation has shown off a key part of its Dream Chaser spaceship – the nose of the vehicle, which you can see here after a busy unveiling event in South Lake Tahoe. The Dream Chaser is a crewed spacecraft that is as much cargo hauler as it is manned spaceflight vehicle. It is designed to dock with the International Space Station – though it will also make test drops from the edge of space, and offer some data on the feasibility of storing supplies on board a craft that can do short shuttle-style flights in Earth’s atmosphere to anywhere in the world. That cargo will come from space capsules or shuttles that are brought up to the station. The Dream Chaser is meant to take those capsules or shuttles off the station and carry them away safely, helping the orbiting outpost be more self-sufficient. It is designed to be able to carry up to 765kg to low Earth orbit, and up to 565kg to the Moon. The Dream Chaser is built using carbon-fiber composites to keep the weight as light as possible, and will be powered by solar-electric propulsion (with lithium-ion batteries for backup). It will fly on short suborbital flights to test vehicle systems, including its launch escape system and air-to-air refueling capability, which can be used to boost the fuel reserves on the space station. SNC unveiled a test vehicle called the Dream Chaser (N43LV) over the weekend – and it looked impressive. Here, the vehicle takes off on a test flight from Edwards Air Force Base in California. 3e33713323
