1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to an improved cuff for use with a container and more particularly, an improved cuff for use with a container to maintain a seal between the container and the cuff.

2. Description of the Prior Art

Continuous flow containers are typically used in transporting fluids from the point of manufacture to the point of use, such as in hospitals, to provide fluid for patients as required. The conventional container includes a closure unit or cap that is configured to receive the container body. The closure or cap includes a valve to control the flow of fluid there through and the cap is designed to fit into the container in a fluid tight manner. In order to provide a seal between the closure and the container body, seals have been provided on the container. However, each time a new container is desired, a new seal must be provided. Accordingly, it is an object
