Monalisa 23-09-2013, 01:18 PM It is clearly define a further effort to determine the health care payment options for people who can not afford the insurance. I have been utilizing the different points that this article has introduced for some time and as such I was searching for more details on the subject matter and came across this web page. korreeta 23-09-2013, 02:01 PM Precisely, yes. thanks for sharing. nandam 25-09-2013, 12:24 AM I don't even know how I ended up here, but I thought this post was great. I do not know who you're but certainly you're going to the famous blogger if you are not already :) Cheers!! thought I'd do a little bit of digging, but wasn't able to find the proper info. Would someone here be able to tell me if Epson has finished their own color management? I know that they have it in their laser printers, but if they make their own in color, do they include it in the printers or are they still relying on the ICM data? Also, what Epson MICM models are included with the 920 and 940 models? Where can I find specs on them? Thanks. Jesse SBS 12-21-2012, 07:09 AM Hello! Here is some quick info about Epson's CM- and also check the application notes for your printer in Print and Scan Utilities that Epson supplies for drivers. Jesse shvibz 12-21-2012, 08:17 AM Now, for my own search... Epson does not own 'official' CM standard, they use ICM3 standard. ICM3 is same kind of Epson's driver and software, but they do not include CM data inside the driver/software. To make Epson ICM/CM compatible, you need to install their software, and record the camera calibration data. And, if you want to use Epson software and standard, you need to add Epson CM libraries to your application. Here is some info about Epson's CM, 3e33713323
