A: I simply used this link: and extracted what I needed. It's a giant download but I didn't care. "Very little by way of a surprise when it comes to the evolving state of the Union's impeachment play over its watery border with Mexico," I wrote in June in "Enter the Storm," my new book, which is published today. I examined, in part, the possibility of President Trump's impeachment based on his rhetorical attacks against the House Intelligence Committee's investigation into his conduct in Ukraine. "A Federal court in Texas recently held that this kind of rhetoric alone is not enough to justify an impeachment," I pointed out, "but in the impeachment context, it doesn't matter — there's a presumption that Congress will act and the president will be impeached." This week, for our second book club pick, the president's attack on his impeachment acquittal in the Senate has sparked a new and far more dramatic push from his opponents to act. And this time, there's no question about its legality: "This is not a situation in which the president can demand Congress do something that is not a constitutional power," House Speaker Nancy Pelosi said in a major speech last night, noting that Democrats had previously "investigated" and "impeached" other presidents. Of course, it's not the only time that the president's boastful assertion — "I never did anything wrong. They don't have to impeach me. They can't do it, because it would look bad." — has been attacked. I talked with our Washington bureau chief, Peter Baker, about that very question: "Has this become a political fight that we're going to care about?" Peter Baker: It's hard to get a gauge of how people on the outside are reading this, because after all these years, we're all used to the president talking this way. He's absolutely not alone in it. George Bush, for example, said that he felt "admonished" that the Democrats wouldn't give him a real hearing in the House. It's not unusual

Jun 15, 2019 I had the same problem, I solved it by copying the "cappcap" folder from DeSmuME to the "DS" folder of DeSmuME instead of the "cappcap" folder which is in DeSmuME's folder. 30,637 Oct 8, 2019 I've also tried renaming the "cappcap" folder inside DeSmuME to "capcap" and put it in the "DS" folder, but still no luck. Oct 9, 2019 Someone posted in the comments of the LPDaniode.zip announcement that he could get it to work with a simple copy. Oct 10, 2019 Someone in the comments also said in the comments that it was still not working for them. Please post below if you have succeeded. Couple of hot flashes turned into a full-blown headache for some women Wednesday morning. And the Los Angeles Fire Department had to dispatch crews to a bank, where the issue started. "We've got no power to the building that we do our banking in," said Los Angeles Fire Department spokeswoman Brandi Pfeifer. "Power to the building was out," she added. Firefighters responded to the bank in the 7300 block of S. De Haro Blvd. around 11 a.m. "Two EMTs went inside," Pfeifer said. "They made sure no one was hurt and then called in our fire crew. There were two employees in there at the time. They were checked out, they were fine." The fire department used a boat with special equipment to cut the cables to the building's electric utility company's main line. Power was soon restored to the bank, Pfeifer said.
