Return to site index Why Is Something In The Public Domain? E-Cracks Why Is Something In The Public Domain? The public domain is a large empty blank space. In most countries, it is made up of things that belong to no one. for example, libretti,poems, paintings, photographs, phonograms, plays, films, choccie beans, songs or pieces of music, poems, paintings, drawings, photographs, books, articles, stamps, coins, watches, trademarks, patents, visas, citizenship, and on and on. This list is not complete. And because it is all big and blank, it is also hard to see and hard to use. Even if you find something in the public domain, there is often a tricky legal "hurdle" you have to jump over to do anything with it. It is for this reason that The Public Domain is also referred to as "the commons" or "the great emptiness." There is a reason that it is hard to "own" something in the public domain. It is a public good. We all have a share in the public domain. The more people who use something, the more useful it is. It is a credit to everyone. Owning something means you can do what you want with it. You get to exercise your exclusive right to use and/or copy and share it. And you get to exclude others from doing the same thing. If someone else has a copyright on something, this means you can use it but you can't make copies or share the copies you make. You have to ask the owner of the copyright for permission to use it. If you don't get permission, the law says you can't use it. That is why having copyrights is such a mess. Ownership might seem important, f30f4ceada
