The people here are a collection of people, those who adhere to one or another religious tradition, as well as living, or doing some other activity on their behalf. The concept of "people" - common to all Indian religions and local traditions, exists in various forms. As a rule, it implies people belonging to one or another current of faith, united by a common view of the world. Most Hindu pantheons are based on three gods - Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva. The world created by Brahma includes the manifestation of the Divine will, and this manifestation is both the material world and the non-material, spiritual dimension. The essential characteristics of this world are, above all, order and law. According to Hinduism, Lord Vishnu has the power to change the course of world history, however, unlike other world gods who are in a state of constant struggle with each other, Vishnu retains his powers, "pulling" them into the past or into the future. He is the personification of goodness, justice, truth, goodness and eternity. In his hands is the attributes of divine power - a ring, or tirthankar, used to address Vishnu, or head decorations ("vishishta") - an ornament consisting of two balls connected by a golden thread ("siddhi"). Food in India is inextricably linked with culture: the sun, stars, sky, minerals, trees, water, fire - all this can be part of food. In cult practice, there have always been special products that were isolated from the plant, animal or mineral world. The first ceremony
