Note When you open Photoshop, it asks you to specify the location of your new file. Choose File⇒Save and give the file the name `PSAd.psd` (Mac) or `PSAd.psd` (Windows). In step 5, give your new file a name and location in your computer's hard drive. Now Photoshop can load the photos from your computer. A dialog box will appear asking you where you'd like to save the photos. 6. Select Save and choose Library (Mac) or Documents (Windows) as the destination. Your newly created Photoshop file opens. ## Creating an Empty Photoshop File An empty Photoshop file is usually the most basic file type. It is also the type most people create when they first use Photoshop. At its most basic, an empty file is just an open picture window with no layers.

Q: The MLCP control not sending any packets on all the 6 ports I am working on the article about Linux Socket programming. Till chapter 4, all goes well. The program successfully executes the Listen and RecvSocket. But I read the book and study the MLCP driver source code, and found the net_lock must be locked before function socket_send(struct socket *sk, struct sk_buff *skb, int flags), it says, if we do not have the lock, the server thread might miss a queue packet and not send on a particular port. But my program is still not sending packet on all 6 ports in the loop, I am still getting the packet only on the first two ports, then the server thread missed the packet. My server thread static ssize_t net_send(struct socket *sk, const void *buf, size_t count, int flags) { struct sk_buff skb = NULL; lock_kernel(); / send all packets through this listener socket / skb = skb_dequeue(&sk->sk_receive_queue); / submit all packets to the corresponding transmitter */ if (skb) { send(skb->sk, buf, count, flags); } unlock_kernel(); return count; } The client program static void __poll(struct file *filp, poll_table *pt) { struct socket *sock = filp->private_data; struct sock *sk = sock->sk; struct inet_sock *inet = inet_sk(sk); poll_wait(filp, &sk->sk_receive_queue, pt); for (;;) { struct sk_buff *skb = NULL; skb = skb_dequeue(&sk->sk_receive_queue); if (!skb)
