The House of Representatives on Monday unanimously passed a package of bills that will create one of the most permissive gun laws in the U.S. and make it easier to carry a firearm across state lines. The package includes gun policies, legislation protecting immigrants from deportation and controversial laws to allow for the confiscation of firearms. The bills passed the House Monday, while a group of Texas Democrats have been fighting to add a measure protecting individuals with religious objections to gun control to the chamber's agenda. The legislation will likely face a tougher time in the Senate, where its chances are not as good. Senate lawmakers from both parties left the Capitol Monday night to attend events in their home districts. Texas is one of 27 states that does not require a permit to own a handgun, according to The New York Times.

Binding of phospholipids to oil-in-water emulsions and to individual emulsion droplets. We have used fluorescence microscopy and quadrupole ion trap mass spectrometry to analyze the binding of phospholipids to oil-in-water emulsion droplets. The data indicate that negatively charged droplets bind phosphatidylserine and positively charged droplets bind phosphatidylethanolamine. These observations are consistent with the electrostatic interactions that occur between phospholipids and negatively charged droplets. When positively charged droplets bind phosphatidylethanolamine, the droplets appear to be partially ruptured. In contrast, phosphatidylserine-containing droplets appear to be very stable.

Q: Why is `readlink /proc/self/fd/` in `zsh` substituted with a point only when `$SLASH` is on? If `$SLASH` is on, `readlink` in `zsh` will not substitute the path, but if `$SLASH` is off, it will. A: `readlink` in

To be clear, I'm not going to sit here and try to explain each one individually. All you need to know is that I've compiled about a dozen and kept notes. If you're looking for an explanation, there are a ton of new TED Videos on YouTube. There aren't a ton of them, but they're all good. 1. Want to be happier?
