The Times Picayune also supports the "repeal" of the legislation, but the paper also asserts that legal segregation in New Orleans should be re-examined, after a number of missteps, including Hurricane Katrina, and the high crime rate in New Orleans: "And after recent history, [the New Orleans] Police Department should do a much better job responding to and handling calls of domestic violence, and trying to make neighborhoods safer in ways that include working with folks who live there and getting the word out on these dangers." The New Orleans Police Association opposes the proposed legislation, as does the NOPD's police chief, Michael Harrison, who fears that it would lead to racial profiling by police and a demoralized citizenry. On September 18, 2006, the New Orleans City Council voted to repeal the measure, meaning the law will not go into effect. The "repeal" bill, a resolution introduced by Council President Oliver Thomas, was approved unanimously by the City Council. Mayor Nagin stated that he "did not support the legislation and would have vetoed it if he could have" On January 4, 2007, Republicans filed a lawsuit against the Louisiana Attorney General to challenge the election of the New Orleans City Council, relying on claims that the election of a majority of the council was illegal because the voting rights of African Americans were violated by the city's earlier misdeeds. They asserted that the City Council should be replaced with a council selected by a new election. References External links Text of the Act, Section 8, at the Louisiana State Archives.
