With a little more than six months left to go until the official debut of Windows 10, Microsoft has announced plans to release a free update that will give all Windows 7 users a taste of what's to come on October 26th. Windows 10 is a beta build, available in preview form only to Windows Insiders who have opted to join the program. The update will be available to everyone via the regular Windows Update tool. When you first launch Windows 10, you'll be prompted to accept the update, and you can decline it to prevent the update from installing. Windows 10 will then install the update automatically over the next few days. If you decide to install the preview version of Windows 10, you'll get the chance to see many of the new features Microsoft is planning to include in the final version of the OS. What's new for Windows 7 users is still a bit of a mystery, but you can take a look at the software's individual changes in the official What's New on Windows 10 page. If you're not excited about the new version, consider Windows 8, which you probably also aren't excited about. Just four months ago, Microsoft announced that it was no longer providing free Windows 8 upgrades for those who already had it installed on their computers. Though Microsoft's software licenses are perpetual, consumers can only receive one upgrade per computer at any given time. Microsoft's move came after it lost a long-running court battle with the EU over the bundling of Internet Explorer with Windows. The new, free upgrade path for Windows 10 was announced at the Build 2014 developer conference last month. Microsoft now plans to make the Windows 7 upgrade available for free starting with the Windows 10 public beta release. Update: Windows 10 will be released to consumers on October 22, if you're still interested. There's no telling when we'll

The sessions included four clinical sessions, a review session, a workshop session, and a keynote lecture. Most of the clinical studies focused on established and emerging tracers used for the diagnosis and management of cardiovascular diseases. The imaging agents used for detecting and monitoring coronary artery disease included cardiac perfusion agents for myocardial viability assessment, vasodilator stress agents for detection and quantification of coronary artery disease, and radiotracers for the imaging of myocardial perfusion, myocardial viability, and myocardial fatty acid metabolism.
