Risk factors for heterotopic ossification in a surgical population. We prospectively evaluated risk factors associated with the development of heterotopic ossification (HO) in 44 adult trauma patients undergoing surgery for concomitant injury and major orthopaedic trauma. Subjects were evaluated at baseline and at three, six and 12 months after injury for the presence or absence of HO. Univariate analysis identified five significant factors associated with the development of HO: (1) use of laminar flow surgical room, (2) volume of fluid administered, (3) hemoglobin level, (4) presence of an extended wound and (5) patient position on the operating table. The five factors found to be predictive of HO in the univariate analysis were each found to be significantly associated with HO in the logistic regression analysis. Position on the operating table during surgery and the amount of fluid administered were not significantly associated with HO. Laminar airflow technique and the amount of fluid administered were identified as significant risk factors for the development of HO. Bad Tölz Bad Tölz () is a town in the Oberspreewald-Lausitz district, in eastern Germany. It is situated on the Lauter, a right tributary of the Saale, approx. southeast of the Czech border and northwest of the state capital of Brandenburg, Berlin. History Bad Tölz is first mentioned in a medieval document in 1234. The name was possibly derived from the Slavic word Titul, meaning "crow". During the Middle Ages the town was a stopping point on the salt trade road from Vienna via Tulln in Lower Austria. In 1467, the townsfolk were already up in arms over the salt works of the Wöhrmann von Tölz family, who were taking out large loans to exploit the saltworks. In the Thirty Years War, in 1636, in the rampages of the French army, which encamped before the town in the winter of 1635–1636, the town's population was half of what it had been 30 years earlier. Many houses and gardens were destroyed. After World War I, the Treaty of Versailles as well as the Treaty of St. Germain of 1919 assigned the town to the newly founded state of Prussia. The new state of Bavaria was given most of the rest of the Saale valley area. As part of the territorial re

Q: Cannot use an Array to retrieve data from a mysql database. I am working on a project that's using php and MySQL. On this project, I have a.php page where you can use a web form to enter a 6 digit code to search for a specific record. This page is working fine when I have the number of codes in the code simply stored in a string. However, I need to get them stored in an array so I can do a for each loop with the codes to search for. Originally I stored the codes into a string as follows `$searchcode = $_POST['searchcode']; $searchcodes = $db->prepare("SELECT * FROM Codes WHERE Code= :searchcode;"); $searchcodes -> execute(array(":searchcode" => $searchcode));` Then I stored the codes in an array as follows `$codes = $result->fetch_assoc(); $searchcodes = array($codes);` However, when I changed the string to an array of the codes as above, it gives me the following error: Warning: mysqli_stmt::fetch_assoc() expects parameter 1 to be mysqli_result, boolean given in Any idea why? A: You need to add a result in your execution query, e.g: `$searchcodes = $db->prepare("SELECT * FROM Codes WHERE Code= :searchcode;"); $searchcodes -> execute(array(":searchcode" => $searchcode)); $codes = $searchcodes->fetch_assoc();` I suspect your error comes from the fact that `$result->fetch_assoc()` returns false if there is no data.
