Description: On his path to physical and spiritual healing, a brilliant neurosurgeon finds himself drawn into the world of the mystical arts. What could be worse than these forces and what can a person do to find inner harmony? The continuous struggle between good and evil is an endless race with oneself and mercilessly developing circumstances. But only by overcoming all the foundations of culture that hide true power from him, he will be able to find the way to renewal. Alexander Rogov It's time to change Chapter 1 Man walks on water wandering fire One summer day, when I was still living in the Shetland Islands, a crack appeared in the western wall of my room in the house on Hilly Mountain, and while I was punching a hole in it to insert a glass squid eye, I smeared a piece of the wall with luminous jam. Smoke billowed from the crack. Having made myself a torch of resin, I aimed it at the crack, and it whistled through the room, brushing my legs. I immediately put on sandals and began to play. Music played. Since then, a few years ago, I've been living in Sherwood and in the Scottish Highlands, becoming an acting director, making two short dramas a year. Wealthy ladies on both sides of the Atlantic who dreamed of global fame in high school are now begging me to help them decide what they want to do in the future. I am fond of both directions, but in general, I am best at drama. I often spend several weeks in a row with young actors helping them put their thoughts into their bodies. This is more difficult than it seems to me, because the actors need to completely adjust to movement and breathing, and this task is not as simple as it seems. But I invariably achieve success, and for a long time already all my works began to be staged in theaters; I created about thirty short films. If I am asked about how I make films, I waited
