Cat Et 2011a+ keygen forum.india Updated: Jan 03, 2020 23:25 IST The Rangoli art form of drawing and painting a colourful pattern in the dirt in front of a home, specially on important occasions like Diwali, on Tuesdays and Fridays, has a strict 4pm-to-6pm schedule. The painting at the front of the house becomes a centrepiece for family and guests, and a small — yet big — community turns up to watch the ritual. In the last few decades, the practice of rangoli has earned a name as the hulking art form, because it's the only art form that enacts the art of drawing and painting in front of the house as well. This ritual has a social significance that, in some places, is a community-based activity. Here, two such rangoli artists — Manju of Mangalpur village in Bulandshahr, Uttar Pradesh, and Kalyan of Chambal in Madhya Pradesh — walked through their vivid memories to discuss their Rangoli-making rituals with IANS. "Our forefathers used to draw rangoli, the day is celebrated every year on a specific date, the next day, Wednesday we do it, this is the tradition," says Manju, 25. "After 12 years of marriage, we get one day off a week. All our children, including the youngest, start drawing when they get back from school, then begin painting. It is a mix of the gods and goddesses, the household goddesses, the celebrations, the birthdays of children, the husband's family, so the ritual is really special," she says. The husband's family gets to set the mood — a favourite song with a few beats, or the request of people coming over. "Our elder generation used to do it, but I have taken up the tradition,"

From a red to a blue, linen is such a wonderful backdrop to all the different colors and different styles in our home. I am so obsessed with the Ombre look and decided to attempt it in my own home. First, I must say that the sponges in my sink were in such great shape that I thought I would use them for this look. Aren't they so fancy for the $.99? The first sponge went on the kitchen sink with orange and black spray paint. Then I realized they were not the most worn and ugly side of the sponge. So I put them to use in a kitchen drawer and shabby chic style. Isn't the linen look awesome against the tile? The gray colour went perfectly with my white kitchen!By 570a42141b
