Q: Is a freelancing site safe to use? I am a freelance marketer. I want to build a freelancing website to post jobs and charge $19 a job. I would use Paypal to accept payments on jobs. Is it safe to use Paypal on a website? A: Paypal can be used for most websites, but here are a couple things to keep in mind. It's best to use "sandbox" or "test" accounts when using paypal for your own (or other's) website. This way you can see how the site actually handles the transaction and what will happen if the user's paypal account is later declined. Have your web host verify that you are allowed to use a paypal account to process credit cards. Or disable all the payment options on the website so only paypal can be used for the transaction. If you do the latter, the paypal order should show up as "paid" as soon as it goes through successfully, and the funds should be available in your paypal account. Depending on what you are looking to do, there are also PCI/DSS compliant options for online payment options. On top of that, this is the sort of thing that is easy for you to do -- but could be a royal pain for the user to do. If you can come up with a way for the user to access the site and create an account for the first time, do that. If not, make the site remember who created their account and require a confirmation email to be sent. This way there is a chance they are actually who they say they are.

There has been an international growth in the availability of either non-directive models or 'plain talking' models of psychological therapy. Many of these models are used specifically with people diagnosed with depression. There is currently a group of self-identified 'feminist psychologists' and 'feminist researchers' whose special interest in the complexities of women's experience of intimate relationships and the 'personal' realm of therapy has informed the development of such models. Using a feminist perspective as a basis of assessment of the strengths and weaknesses of these different models has been proposed as a means of facilitating the process of both professional and lay learning from
