A friend of mine tweeted this image of a yellow sticker stuck to her car recently: As you can see, it says "tamp", obviously referring to the car. What does this refer to? What does it refer to in the context of Tampoline track? A: It's just somebody's name. When you tack a note to the car's body, you use the word "tack" which sounds exactly like "tamp". I would guess that this person's name has "t" in it, so they just tack a note to their car with "tamp". For a Tampoline track, see here. A: Did you watch the video? I was in a car crash. I'm OK but my car is a bit messed up, my bumper is shredded and everything, this is what I have been sent to find. I'm going to have to get the car and a garage to sort it out. This is a map to the garage and it is a long way. Follow the road signs and get to the T-Junction. Once there, take the left turn. My garage will be at the end of that road and my map will tell you where I am. It's just a joke because of this. It's basically a prank, to put a note on your car, with someone's name and the only one who'll know what it means is you. Because it's your car. A: It's a prank message, or two people (of even different sex!) have been playing a practical joke and decided to be helpful and leave the person a map on their car. Combined use of EGFR and KRAS mutation analysis for the identification of patients with lung adenocarcinomas with poor prognosis. For patients with small-cell lung cancer, the clinical characteristics of small-cell lung cancer and associated epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR) mutation have been studied and shown to have predictive value for response to EGFR tyrosine kinase inhibitors (TKIs).
