The primary objective of the training portion of the grant is to develop the PI's knowledge and research skills to conduct the proposed research as well as to develop the research environment in a multi-disciplinary environment that includes basic scientists, clinicians, and education experts. The University of Maryland has made significant progress with regard to research and new technology such as quantitative magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) in a safe environment that can contribute to the advancement of neuroimaging research and to the research training environment of the University. The environment within the Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Neurosciences allows training in both basic neuroimaging techniques and the neuropsychiatric disorders that are common in the community and that affect large populations. The proposed research training aims to explore the efficacy of repetitive transcranial magnetic stimulation (rTMS) as a non-invasive treatment for major depression. An rTMS device has been made available to the University of Maryland and will be applied in the proposed research. The specific aims of the proposed research are 1. to assess the efficacy of the rTMS device for the treatment of major depression using multiple outcome measures and assessments, 2. to explore the efficacy of rTMS treatment for major depression in individuals with bipolar disorder, 3. to determine whether rTMS treatment for major 3e33713323
