Enter the names once and print the labels every year.The typical railroad switch tower includes a base, a striker, a contact shoe, a shovel, and a system controller. This system controller is typically a mechanical device that senses the switching function of the switch tower by observing the position of the striker and provides a switching signal to the system controller, which is typically located within the railroad. In some systems, when the striker moves forward, as the striker is pushed into the base, the first shovel rotates upward to a first position, and the contact shoe moves downward to an on-position. When the striker moves rearward, as the striker is pulled away from the base, the first shovel rotates downward to a second position, and the contact shoe moves upward to an off-position. The system controller in such a system then determines whether switching of the switch is desired by monitoring the position of the contact shoe and the shovel, and outputs a switching signal if switching of the switch is desired. To effectuate this switching function, the contact shoe and shovel are typically located within the tower so as to be easily accessed by the system controller. A disadvantage of such switch towers is that the switch towers can present a poor visual appearance as the vertical height of the switch tower is significantly taller than a person's eye level. Thus, as a result of the poor visual appearance, a person could enter the switch tower, and not realize that the switch tower contained an on-switch, or on-position, or an off-switch, or off-position. Such an oversight could result in injury. Further, with such switches, the vertical height of the switch tower means that an operator must stoop and crawl into the switch tower, which can also result in injury. Thus, systems have been proposed that eliminate the switch tower, and replace the switch tower with a system that is constructed so as to be non-injurious to people

What's New in the MetaLabels?

This is a very easy to use application for printing address labels. You can create labels in any format you desire. It prints the labels in the correct type of lettering you specified. For example, you can create labels with the address in Italics or Bold and print them the correct way. You can also create labels in any size or layout you desire. You can create labels that can be printed on one line or multiple lines. You can create labels with no gaps or white space. The only limit is your imagination. What's New: ⏹ We have improved the web site a little to make it more friendly to use. ⏹ Added Printing with OCR to the Web Site. You can now upload a label file and it will search the text and print. ⏹ Support for over 10 additional Label and Address Formats. ⏹ Printing up to 12 labels at one time. ⏹ Added support for printing into a Zip folder. ⏹ Added support for double sided printing. ⏹ Added a "Save Image" option. ⏹ The controls are now more compact. ⏹ Various other minor bug fixes and enhancements. Technical Requirements: ⏹ Microsoft.NET Framework. Limitations: ⏹ The labels are printed based on the format you set them to be. ⏹ The "Auto-Append" feature cannot be used for the URL or E-mail fields. If you enter the data manually, the labels will not auto-append. ⏹ The "Set Address Labels" cannot be used for Zip Codes. ⏹ The "Spell Check" feature is not supported for any of the format types. ⏹ The images are sent directly to a printer and not a PDF document. So there are no formatting issues. ⏹ Labels cannot be printed back-to-back. ⏹ The "Save Image" option will only save a single page. ⏹ The "Spell Check" feature is not supported for any of the format types. ⏹ Notes cannot be printed. ⏹ You can save or use the same label file multiple times. ⏹ You can use the label formatting options to print a label with an image. The image must be a.jpeg file. ⏹ There are no size restrictions for labels. You can print a single, double, multiple line
