What's New in the?

- Shorten URLs and organize favorite links into a database - View a list of shortened links and their display names in an organized way - Create a list of websites to keep track of themIs it already too late to stop climate change? May 13, 2017 Last year, negotiators from more than 190 nations were celebrating the Paris Agreement as a major victory in tackling the threats of climate change. Significantly, the Agreement, which came into force this year, marked the first time that countries have ever acknowledged the scientific fact that climate change is one of the greatest threats to human well-being. The Agreement promises to be the key safeguard of humanity's climate future. The Paris Agreement will enter into force after each country has signed and ratified the Agreement. But 2018 is going to be a critical year for its implementation. The first thing to be implemented is the full functioning of the Adaptation Fund for climate change. The adaptation fund is a financing mechanism that contributes to climate resilience. The fund helps developing nations to adapt to the impacts of climate change, and it also supports the capacity building of the poor and vulnerable people. The initial budget is USD 6.5 billion. The fund is financed by developed countries. Every November, the Paris Agreement focuses on the implementation of the Paris Accord, and in the run-up to the 2019 United Nations Climate Change Conference in San Francisco, there will be a special session on the implementation of the Paris Agreement. One of the most important terms of the Paris Agreement is its very first provision - the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities. The Paris Agreement is said to be the world's first deal that places the main burden of climate change not on the developed world, where the problems have already been created, but on the developing world, where the problems are first arising. The Paris Agreement also demonstrates the role of the United Nations as a central facilitator to ensure the successful implementation of climate change, reflecting the original idea of the United Nations. This should not be regarded as an impractical suggestion. The United Nations is at the forefront of climate change debate. It serves as a central forum where governments not only discuss the causes of climate change but also agree on important issues pertaining to climate change. Thus far, the United Nations has shown leadership in ensuring the successful implementation of the Paris Agreement. Now it is time for the rest of the world to step up to the plate. Who will
