When a moving body, for example, a lead roll, is driven at a constant speed, it is necessary that the temperature of the moving body be constantly detected, its temperature be regulated, and the regulated temperature be maintained even if there are thermal variations in the moving body. A first conventional temperature-control apparatus is shown in FIG. 1. The apparatus is provided with a casing 1 having a passage 1A therein, a temperature-control liquid 2 sealed in the casing 1, and a thermistor 3 of which temperature corresponds to that of the temperature-control liquid 2. In operation, the thermistor 3 is caused to face the passage 1A and transmit heat from the passage 1A to the thermistor 3. The temperature of the thermistor 3 is displayed on 5b5f913d15
