Q: Where do we go for "How to run a software project?" This is part of what I was hoping to get out of the Software Development beta site: A: Typically in the middle of your project: you need a bit of infrastructure, whether it is the infrastructure you'll have to provide yourself, or the infrastructure that others will provide you you'll likely need information about users you might need some performance analysis you might need to understand what some documentation like a user manual is, and how you can create it You can discuss specific problems you need to solve, but you also might not be entirely sure what problems you will encounter, or how they'll happen. You'll typically need more background on the problem you're attempting to solve, and the way you want to solve it, before you can come up with a decent discussion.

Media playback is unsupported on your device Media caption After more than 10 years in prison, a judge says he doesn't deserve the death penalty. In America, the thought of death is rarely thought of as a luxury. It's a daily reality for millions of Americans. For many, there are no other options. Others want the death penalty as a means to exact retribution for the murderer. It's just another weapon to fight crime. In the courts, those who want to die face a daunting and lengthy process. Some cases can take up to decades to resolve, and in the meantime the accused are still alive and able to cause further damage. But in some rare cases, those facing the ultimate punishment are given a chance to prove their innocence. At times like this, we look to science to help us work out how the person in front of us got to this point. And so we brought in Dr Christina Renna, a bioethicist at the University of Miami School of Medicine. Image copyright Getty Images "We get charged with the task of trying to figure out what is the most appropriate punishment for someone accused of a crime," she tells the BBC. "The law is trying to accomplish a number of things when it comes to capital punishment. It has to have the appearance of justice. It has to have a deterrent effect. It has to be precise, it has to have appropriate limits on the imposition of the death penalty. It has to avoid any double jeopardy issues, and it has to have a deterrent effect to potential future offenders." She argues that the death penalty is a drastic measure that cannot be easily implemented
