What's New in the White Dock Icons Set?

----- The White Dock dock icons are designed with an eye to subtlety and style. Each image in this pack is carefully constructed and fits perfectly to be used with the native macOS dock. Installation: ----- Copy the entire folder into your /Applications/ folder on your computer. NOTE: - There is no "All in One" option for this pack, unlike some other packs I've made, so if you want to use the pack with your dock you'll have to copy every icon file you want. - If you have any troubles you can always contact me at: [adrian_resi\[at\]googlemail\[dot\]com](mailto:adrian_resi[at]googlemail[dot]com) - If you have a pack of my own that's at least similar to the one you'll be replacing you can check it out: License: ----- - Creative Commons Attribution 3.0 - - GNU General Public License - Q: How to get only one core Data out of a XMPPConnection object I'm writing a server in Objective-C and sending out data to other Macs over xmpp. I'm currently using an XMPPConnection object, but I'm having some difficulty getting my head around the best way to serialise and de-serialise the data that I'm sending. What I'm using the most at the moment is NSData. If I send out 3 strings, I get back a bunch of NSData objects, but these contain all the 3 strings. I've seen something in the documentation about XMPPStreamInfo having a mutableData method, but I'm not sure how to make use of it. Can anyone point me in the right direction? A: For those interested, it turns out that the answer was right under my nose. The mutableData method returns a mutable string. I can now construct my message from the string, and my messages are a lot more compact than if I were sending individual NSData objects. a form of entry and is often a requirement to be included with the vendor's gross allotment, but does not appear as part of the vendor's net allotment. In the States, however, one can apply for a tax exemption as a vendor of food items for resale. The IRS defines a vendor as "a person engaged in the business of making sales of food for consumption on the premises or for further distribution at retail or wholesale." Generally, food consumed on site and food purchased for further distribution are both considered to be "prepared" food
