OptMeowt is a cute and helpful initiative that offers the transparency of an open-source project and the means to proactively send 'Do Not Sell' signals to the websites you access and potentially collect your data (for further selling it or for other reasons). Essentials to know about this project OptMeowt is a free browser enhancer. Its source code is public on GitHub. As a result, you can send feedback to the developers, as well as check the project's progress (if you become interested in it). OptMeowt is available for Chrome and Firefox. Also, the file size and additional processes it executes are few and they does not impact your PC's performance in a considerable way. This project is initiated by a team of academic researchers at the Wesleyan University, in Ohio.

OptMeowt successfully identifies websites that you visit and collect your data.

Afterward, the browser enhancer sends a 'Do Not Sell' message to those domains. What the add-on offers and checking the domain list of accessed sources The Firefox add-on is simplistic and does not require extra effort to understand its mechanisms. Just install it, make sure it is enabled, and start the navigation process. By clicking the toolbar icon, you can see, in real-time, the number of domains you visited and the 'Do Not Sell' message has been sent to.

Also, in the tool's settings, you can check the domains you navigated and were actively collecting data. You can further see the website's responses and whether or not they are GPC compliant, meaning if they have the means to receive and respond to a signal that indicates you want to opt-out of their data sharing activities. Final thoughts To conclude, this browser enhancer is super lightweight and mild on your system's resources. It is comfortable to use, brings awareness over the data collection issue, and efficiently indicates the websites and domains that actively collect data about their users. As a consequence, whether or not those websites intend to sell your data, they are notified of the fact that you know about their tracking activities and wish not to have your information offered for commercialization. ### What's New in the?

The Internet is dominated by ad-driven online media. To achieve a massive reach to users, online media need to collect your personal information to target advertisements and such campaigns. Without the consent, you have no option but to divulge your identity to the online publishers. OptMeowt is a simple browser add-on that notifies you when you visit or access ad-sponsored domains. It indicates whether or not the websites are online GPC partners, as it can be verified if they have the capacity to respond to signals indicating that the user wants to refrain from having their personal data collected. Staying clear of such domains is easy. OptMeowt will indicate them and inform you of the status of the associated websites. This is all. At first, browsers are meant to be friendly and easy to use. In the past, browsers have been improved in the most basic and essential ways. Browsers have been made faster and more efficient, better and better. It's hard to imagine a time when you will have to feel as though you're a slave to a browser. But, and this is a big but, a lot of the changes have come without proper consideration or consideration at all to the privacy of users. They have been made without the intention of helping people get away from intrusive, suspicious advertisements. On top of that, browsers are also designed with an understanding that users are in danger of getting infected with viruses and malware. That's what the whole ad-blocking philosophy is based on. A lot of time has passed since browsers became mainstream. The ad-blocking debate has been fought time and again. A lot of resources have been spent in the effort of blocking ads, and browsers are the ones left behind, as users have to sit through their own ads. The future is here, and it is full of IoT (internet of things), malware, and other security threats. With the help of such threats, you're left with what is often referred to as a slow, ineffective browser. But, the future is here. And so, it is time to move forward. It's time to have a browser that not only knows what you want, but is there to give you what you want, and it has to be something that you can trust. A browser that respects your privacy and protects you from infections. A browser that has to fight against the newest forms of malware and even hacking attempts. It's time for the next big leap in browsers, and it is called Vivaldi. Advantages of Vivaldi Vivaldi is the first browser that comes with a lot of new features and, it was built to change the way you navigate the web. One of the most popular features, and a hot feature, is the possibility
