Posting ads on a popular social network could turn the tables for law enforcement in the next edition of the Silk Road heist case. An online ad posted last week offering a reward of up to $10 million for evidence leading to the arrest of anyone involved in the 2014 hack and sale of more than $325 million worth of the online drug market Silk Road has been scanned by detectives and forensics specialists in at least two states, said two law enforcement officials who spoke on condition of anonymity. Silk Road, which offered encrypted and anonymous access to illegal goods, drugs, and services on the Internet, was shut down last year. The FBI's indictment against its alleged mastermind, Dread Pirate Roberts, and other accomplices shows that he hacked into the servers of the dark web site. The auction, which attracted about 400 advertisers, could have been the first such law enforcement-led bidding process in the United States, said the officials. It was set up by the Internet Crimes Against Children Task Force and the International Consortium of Investigative Journalists, which obtained a copy of the ad. The posting, which ended Wednesday, offered a $500,000 reward for identifying and reporting any who helped with the hack. "It shows the evolution of online crime," said Bill Sweetland, the agency's director in New Hampshire. His state's law enforcement agencies, including the State Police, were also investigating, he said. Mr. Sweetland said it was unclear who was responsible for the hacking, but his agency believed the site itself had been hacked by more than one individual. If the auction is successful, detectives will be able to create a map of IP addresses that were accessed by scammers and could serve as the basis for follow-up investigations and the prosecution of those who carried out the hack, he added. "We get requests on an almost daily basis for IP addresses to be investigated," Mr. Sweetland said, "and this is one way to solve the puzzle in a more expedient and economical fashion." A separate law enforcement source in New Jersey said the task force was investigating the posting, though it did not offer any details. The New Jersey Internet Crimes Against Children Task Force is investigating similar activities, including auctions, across the United States, according to a spokeswoman for the agency, which operates out of the state's attorney general's office. What's New in the Photoshop 2020?

In a development that has jolted the Obama administration into explaining why the US remains undecided on whether or not to go to war against Iran, the head of the CIA, Leon Panetta, has told Congress that the CIA had proof of Iran supplying arms to the Syrian opposition. "We saw evidence that Iran was providing artillery to the opposition, that they had been providing communications gear, surveillance gear, and also some attack helicopters," Panetta said, explaining that the US needed confirmation that these munitions had reached the Syrian opposition forces. It's no secret the CIA and the White House are at odds over whether the US should go to war against Iran, and Panetta himself was at the center of a dispute with the CIA director, Leon Panetta, last month, when he announced that the CIA had concluded that Iran was not pursuing the nuclear weapon. The CIA had informed the White House the agency's assessment days earlier, which resulted in the White House publicly rejecting the CIA's assessment. But Panetta's confirmation of an Iranian-supplied arms supply is the latest in a string of leaks suggesting the US is about to launch air strikes against Iran. Other notable leaks from the same day as Panetta's comments include an assessment of the Syrian opposition by a Defense Intelligence Agency veteran, Col. Steve Warren, and another that Russia was supplying arms and ammunition to the Syrian opposition. The White House has been warned these leaks will be detrimental to Obama's relationship with President Putin. The latest leak is an explicit threat to the credibility of the administration. It is difficult to defend if the CIA is able to confirm the Syrian arms reaching the opposition. The US military has already been very explicit about the difficulty of an airstrike that tries to avoid collateral damage, including civilian deaths. From the NYT: "All American pilots are used to seeing themselves as guardians of the American people," said Scott Gration, a retired Air Force colonel who is director of the Program on Peace-building and Rights at Columbia University. "Our pilots are morally bound by their conscience and the law to take the necessary steps to avoid collateral damage." The DOD even has a page dedicated to exacting such proper concern for collateral damage and civilian deaths, which includes the highly sensitive details that civilian deaths are inevitable. The leak directly threatens military and political advisors at every level who will be involved in the decision making on whether to go to war against Iran or not. In a State Department briefing with the Times, a spokesman
