Musica Moderna (Márquez) - Danzon No. 2

Category:Chamber music by Arturo Márquez Category:DanzónQ: Does this semantic of classes imply this syntax? I've seen various posts here that questions the format/structure of classes similar to the way I'm asking this question. Asking first because it's been a really bothersome nuisance to me so I want to get this out of my head. I'm implementing the very simple tutorial described here. [Link] When I run the code I get an error: class does not have a constructor defined. I understand that the compiler expects a constructor to be defined like so: `public class User { public User(String userName, String userPassword) { } }` But I'm not sure why it's not allowing me to call the constructor like so: `public class User { public User(String userName, String userPassword) { } }` A: It seems that there are two different constructs being used. The first, is the inner class itself, in the tutorial, which you've translated directly. `public class Sample { public static class User { public User(String userName, String userPassword) { // User constructor logic } } }` This outer class extends the inner class. It's its own type, not just a class inside the inner class. `public class Sample { public class User { public User(String userName, String userPassword) { // User constructor logic } } }` The second syntax is the outer class defining a constructor method within itself. `public class Sample { public class User { public void User(String userName, String userPassword) { // User constructor logic } }`

The internal mammary artery has become an important adjunct to revascularization after myocardial infarction. In some patients, use of the internal mammary artery and other myocardial revascularization techniques resulted in relief of angina and in increased survival. Survival and rate of freedom from disabling angina have not been reported for patients who have undergone coronary artery bypass grafting with the internal mammary artery anastomosed to the left anterior descending artery alone. The use of the internal mammary artery in conjunction with other myocardial revascularization procedures has become routine, and the internal mammary artery is being used increasingly in patients undergoing concomitant arterial or valvular surgery.
