Yes, you with the fingers on the keyboard and the bird behind your ear! Good day, fellow Internetsian! Today I will show you a feature in the SwiftMailer package that I did not show in my last SwiftMailer tutorial. We can use PHP's mail() function to send mail from SwiftMailer in a different way than what we did before. Before going into more detail about the mail() function, let's take a look at the difference. In our previous tutorial, we used the send() function to send messages. The send() function sends messages out using the Mailer, but you have to specify whether you want to use PHPMailer or SwiftMailer. As most users would like to use SwiftMailer, we did not want to confuse users by using the send() function, if we also use SwiftMailer. So, we told the user that we use SwiftMailer. As you can see in the part with the require statements, we always use SwiftMailer. Now, it may seem like we are saying that SwiftMailer is always used by setting the variable $mailer. Not so! The following line of code uses PHP's mail() function: mail($to, $subject, $message, 'From: '); If we use this function, the mail is sent by the operating system's mail service. This means that PHP only sets flags and passes the message to the operating system's mail service. Even if you have no idea what that means, as long as PHP's mail() function works, it's all good. So the advantage of PHP's mail() function is that it is very easy to use. It sets the flags, passes the message, and then it's done. We can safely do other things in PHP while we're waiting for the email to be sent. Also, we don't have to worry about security issues, as the operating system does the work for us. As an added bonus, the php.ini settings 3da54e8ca3
