The Nature of the Ubiquitin Ligase E3-Triggered Immune Response. The ubiquitin system plays an important role in regulating the innate immune response and establishing adaptive immunity. The recognition of pathogens by host cells initiates signaling cascades that induce NF- κ B (nuclear factor- κ B) and IRF3 (interferon regulatory factor 3) and the production of inflammatory cytokines. These signaling cascades are initiated by recognition of pathogen-associated molecular patterns (PAMPs), such as PAMPs of bacteria and viruses, by membrane proteins such as Toll-like receptors (TLRs) and cytosolic proteins such as RIG-I (retinoic acid inducible gene-1), and are accompanied by the ubiquitination of target substrates by host cell E3 ubiquitin ligases. The ubiquitin-proteasome system is one of the major mechanisms through which the host cell, via signaling mediated by deubiquitination enzymes, modulates the PAMP-induced signaling pathway. This review focuses on the molecular mechanism of the recognition of PAMPs by TLRs and RIG-I and the crosstalk between the ubiquitin system and signaling cascades initiated by these receptors. Q. Does Prolog use boolean variables for unification purposes? I am a newbie in Prolog and I was wondering whether a Prolog interpreter/compiler verifies the unification of variables, inside a prolog program, with respect to the boolean values or not. For example, if we have a predicate d (which defines the number of days in a week) as follows, d(Weekday, Day, n):- d(Weekday, Day1, n1), d(Weekday, Day2, n2), n is n1+n2. Will the interpreter or the compiler check to see if n is equal to sum of n1 and n2 or it will use n1+n2. A: It's a little bit difficult to tell from your example, but generally the Prolog
