Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a memory controller, a memory system, and a communication method, and more particularly to a memory controller, a memory system, and a communication method that handle communications with a plurality of memory components of which communication paths are not synchronous.

2. Description of the Related Art In order to communicate with a memory component in a high-performance computer system, a memory controller must address a number of memory components present in the computer system. With current semiconductor memory components, it is almost impossible to address several hundred memory components with a single memory controller. To make such a task possible, a hierarchical memory bus structure is necessary, because modern semiconductor memories have a hierarchical memory bus. A hierarchical memory bus design allows several memory components to be physically addressed by a memory controller. A technique for controlling a semiconductor memory component to compensate for a timing difference between the phase of a system clock signal and the phase of a timing signal generated within the semiconductor memory component, has already been developed. Such a technique is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,731,651, for example. Computer systems tend to have become larger, which means that the memory components, such as main memory, cache memory and sub-caches, are also larger. As the performance of the main memory, the cache memory and the sub-caches improves, the system clock frequencies increase. The memory components operate synchronously with the system clock signal. Therefore, it is not possible to make a memory controller more compact by increasing the number of memory controllers to address multiple memory components. Computer systems are often configured to allow memory components to be removed. For example, the memory components may be removed from the system during system upgrades. Therefore, it is necessary to be able to supply memory components to the computer system, without physically connecting the memory components to the system. In order to access several hundred memory components in a computer system with a small number of memory controllers, a hierarchical memory bus structure is needed. This makes the system design more complicated. As more and more mobile and other types of portable electronic devices become smaller in size, they become more and more
