Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a cordless screwdriver, and more particularly to a cordless screwdriver that has a telescopic power transmission assembly for providing maximum torque in a short range. 2. Description of Related Art Electric screwdrivers of various types and power scales are common, and are shown, for example, in Taiwan Patent No. M291448. Conventional electric screwdrivers have a head that is rotatably connected with a shaft by use of a coupling. A pressing member is mounted on the head, and connected with a motor via a gear box. The motor drives the gear box to rotate the head through the coupling, and has a power transmission assembly that includes a cam shaft, a spring, and a toothed wheel. The toothed wheel transmits power to a screwdriver bit that is located at a distal end of the screwdriver bit. However, the motor must pull the cam shaft with a large force that is provided by a large spring.

Having a snowstorm or ice storm on the way can be scary, but it's good to be prepared. The best way to avoid a power outage, snow removal, or other emergency is to be prepared. Here are some ways to get ready for the storm.bacterium* despite the numerous strains included in this phylogenetic analysis. According to the degree of genetic divergence, *S. aureus* strains can be separated into at least four major clades: clades I and II comprise coagulase negative staphylococci, clade III clades containing *S. epidermidis* and clade IV clade containing only one *S. aureus* strain (Figure 1A). Clade I includes CoNS strains from the human gut, CoNS-associated bovine mastitis strains, and one strain from an equine follicle. Interestingly, *S. epidermidis* and *S. saprophyticus* strains were closely related to CoNS strains from the human gut, suggesting that they might have diverged from them during a period of co-diversification. Clade II included CoNS strains from human skin, and *S. saprophyticus* strains from sewage and human skin. Besides *S. aureus*, this clade also included *S. epidermidis*, *S. saprophyticus*, and *S. xylosum*. In addition to CoNS, *S. epidermidis* strains represented a clade within clade II, whereas all the *S. saprophyticus* strains represented a distinct clade. Among the more than 40 bovine mastitis *S. aureus* strains, a few clades were recognised, e.g. clade III containing only mastitis associated strains and clade IV containing only one strain. Mammalian adaptation and niche colonization are well characterized for *S. aureus*, but little is known about host specificity and prevalence of different CoNS species ([@ 1cdb36666d

In this study, the use of ptychography to image nanoparticles in the rhizosphere is evaluated. The goal was to establish if the use of ptychography in transmission electron microscopy could produce images of smaller nanoparticles within the rhizosphere. Nanoparticles of titanium dioxide TiO2 were placed on the
