Solarwinds Engineer's Toolset (ETS) v11. 1 Win7.Q: Dynamic Update view Given a table, how can I refresh the view of that table after I update a single row? I want to update one row, and then instantly refresh the view of that table. A: You can't refresh a View automatically; you'll need to refresh the query. In SQL Server Management Studio, view the query as ViewQuery. As an alternative, you can use the built-in ability of SQL Server to query the data before updating it, and then update it. You would do something like: update something set things = [select more from otherstuff] where things = thing This will return the number of rows that were updated, and you can then refresh your query to show the results. A: Just in case someone is still searching for this answer... using the database: As of SQL Server 2005 you can use MERGE to synchronize data between the source and target (destination) tables. You can use the operator to control how data is propagated
